The invention may be applied in particular to the decoding of error-correcting codes which are adapted for detecting and/or correcting errors in data words containing a number of bits which are equal to the word length. The invention may thus be applied for instance to codes of the hamming type. In order to correct errors in data words containing words of equal size, the use of encoding circuits is known, especially in connection with the transmission and reception of video signals and the like. Such encoding circuits include a storage circuit for storing data words each of which comprises an address and a data word, and means for converting such data words into codewords which are representative of the original data words. The conversion into codewords involves a number of stages which comprise at least one error-correcting step in which a correction code word is generated by the Hamming algorithm. The original word is then obtained from the codeword by the decoding algorithm. A decoding circuit implementing the decoding algorithm is also known, which circuit comprises means of checking the validity of the codeword and of recovering the data word from the codeword. A decoding circuit is known, for example, from U.S. Pat. No. 4,229,890 which comprises a means of checking the validity of the codeword, and means of recovering the original word from the codeword. This circuit operates on codewords comprising a number of data words each of which comprises an address and a data word and is of equal size to the data word. The
