(Or more accurately, in the middle of the barrel). This was during the last video and pictures in her Las Vegas show. In what appeared to be an accident, Britney accidentally shot and killed her son while he was left laying on the ground because she thought the safety was still on. Reports of Britney shooting herself at the shoulder aroused speculation of her involvement in the death of her son. However, first responders who arrived on the scene woke her from her apparent suicide to find out that she was completely unharmed. In a 2007 legal conference, Britney expressed her unhappiness of what happened to her son. She had always had a competitive edge while in the spotlight, who was one of the first stars who realized that she had to marry a billionaire to survive in Hollywood. The failure of a vocal demonstration on her part is what is being seen as the trigger that lead to the violent tragedy. The media obsession with her personal life sparked the shooting, as well as the fights with her husband Kevin Federline, with whom she was married for eight years and had one child, Sean. Source:
