Clinical studies on myeloma patients receiving either high or low-dose intravenous bisphosphonates. The safety and efficacy of a low dose (1 mg intravenous (i.v.) zoledronate once every 12 weeks) and a high dose (4 mg zoledronate twice every 12 weeks) of bisphosphonates (BPs) have been evaluated in a randomized, double-blind, two-group comparative trial. Three hundred and eighty myeloma patients were randomized to one of the two treatment groups. Patients received intravenous BPs for 3 years, and cumulative doses of 72 mg (4 mg twice a year) for the low dose group and 360 mg (1 mg twice a year) for the high dose group. Adverse events, bone mineral density (BMD) and biochemical markers of bone resorption and turnover were monitored throughout the treatment. Intravenous BPs at doses of 1 mg and 4 mg were effective in inhibiting the bone resorption induced by myeloma, which resulted in increased BMD at the lumbar spine and distal forearm. There were no significant differences in the incidences of adverse events among the treatment groups. While no significant differences were noted in the incidence of adverse events, hypercalcemia was more common in the high-dose group than in the low-dose group. The proportion of patients with hypercalcemia was significantly higher in the high-dose group than in the low-dose group ( $p = 0.007$ ). These results suggest that intravenous BPs at doses of 1 mg and 4 mg could be safely administered in combination with chemotherapy, and that the higher dose of BPs was more effective in inhibiting bone resorption than the lower dose in patients with advanced myeloma.
